

Greeting by John Anton, Distinguished Professor of Philosophy and Civilization of the University of South Florida

Please accept my congratulations on the establishment and opening of the Interdisciplinary Centre for Aristotle Studies of your University. The establishment of the Centre means a new intellectual and practical beginning with a worldwide scope. The study of Aristotelian work, with the Centre's initiative, declares its contribution to the understanding and future solution of problems of civilized life. We believe that with the commencement of the Centre's operation, a new road is opened for the utilization of Aristotle's wisdom in the practical and theoretical lives of people. Such a course to promote the values of every good state has become an urgent obligation of the present for future generations. I congratulate you on your initiative and send you a heartfelt promise that both myself and scholars everywhere of the work and history of Aristotelian contribution, will stand by you for the success of the mission of your Centre.
